Notes on Contributors

Carmen M. Amerstorfer holds a PhD from the University of Klagenfurt, Austria, where she is employed as Senior Scientist. She taught foreign language learners of all ages and at educational levels from pre-K to tertiary at educational institutions in Austria, the Netherlands, and China. In her current position as a teacher educator, she applies a problem-oriented teaching approach to her courses, focusing, for example, on games and activities in the EFL classroom or global skills. Carmen's main research interests include learner-centered teaching, problem-based learning, strategic language learning, and features of psychology in language learning. In 2015, Carmen organized an international conference on language learning strategies (SSU) that is hosted biennially throughout the world. She co-edited Language Learning Strategies and Individual Learner Characteristics: Situating Strategy Use in Diverse Contexts (2018, Bloomsbury) with Rebecca L. Oxford.

Jean-Marc Dewaele is Professor of Applied Linguistics and Multilingualism at Birkbeck, University of London, UK. He has published widely on individual differences in psychological and emotional variables in second language acquisition and multilingualism. He is former president of the International Association of Multilingualism and the European Second Language Association. He is General Editor of the Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development. He won the Equality and Diversity Research Award from the British Association for Counselling and Psychotherapy (2013) and the Robert Gardner Award for Excellence in Second Language and Bilingualism Research (2016) from the International Association of Language and Social Psychology.

Tammy Gregersen, Professor of TESOL at the American University of Sharjah in the United Arab Emirates, received her MA in education and PhD in linguistics in Chile, where she also began her academic career. She is co-author, with Peter MacIntyre, of Capitalizing on Language Learner Individuality (2014, Multilingual Matters) and Optimizing Language Learners' Nonverbal Communication in the Language Classroom (2017, Multilingual Matters). She is also co-editor, with Peter MacIntyre and Sarah Mercer, of Positive Psychology in SLA (2016, Multilingual Matters), with Peter MacIntyre of Innovative Practices in Language Teacher Education (2017, Springer), and, with Sarah Mercer, of Teacher Well-being (2020, Oxford University Press). She has published extensively in peer-reviewed journals and contributed numerous chapters in applied linguistics anthologies on individual differences, teacher education, language teaching methodology, positive psychology and nonverbal communication in language classrooms. She is passionate about exploring other cultures and has enjoyed the opportunities that participation in international conferences around the world and Fulbright scholar grants to Chile and Costa Rica have provided.

Laura Gurzynski-Weiss, PhD (Georgetown University), is Associate Professor and Director of Undergraduate Studies in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese at Indiana University, USA. She is also an affiliate faculty member of the Cognitive Science Program. Professor Gurzynski-Weiss teaches graduate and undergraduate courses in second language acquisition, teaching methodology, task-based language teaching, individual differences, research methods, and Hispanic linguistics. Her research focuses on variables including input, interaction, feedback, modified output, and task-related factors from cognitive-interactionist, psycholinguistic, usage-based approaches and complex dynamic systems theory. In addition to her publications in journals and edited volumes, she is the editor of Cross-Theoretical Explorations of Interlocutors and their Individual Differences (2020, John Benjamins), and Expanding Individual Differences in the Interaction Approach (2017, John Benjamins), as well as the co-author of Introducción y aplicaciones contextualizadas a la lingüística hispánica (with Manuel Díaz-Campos & Kimberly L. Geeslin; 2018, Wiley-Blackwell). She is the co-recipient of the 2018 TESOL Award for Distinguished Research (with Andrea Révész).
