Shelby L. Claman is trained in both linguistics and language education and recently graduated from the University of Northern Iowa with a Bachelor's degree in teaching English as a second language and Spanish teaching. She is currently pursuing certification in special education and will be a co-teacher for secondary students with specific individual needs in a U.S. high school in fall, 2014. Her research interests lie in the educational system where there is a deficit of cultural and linguistic awareness education. She hopes to pursue issues involved with social justice; in particular, where the ties between socio-economic status and student achievement intersect.
