Simone Pfenninger is a senior assistant at the English Seminar of the University of Zurich, where she teaches courses at the undergraduate level in second language acquisition and psycholinguistics. Outside of the university environment she also completed a teacher training program to become a certified high school teacher. Her recent work has focused on age effects in instructed second language acquisition (cognitive aspects as well as socio-affective factors of language learning, such as language learning motivation, anxiety, learner strategies). Her current research project is concerned with the question as to whether the mandatory school time in Switzerland is long enough for the benefits of early L2 English instruction to unfold.
